

Lifelong Learning is ramping up at Mesa Community College

The New Frontiers Lifelong Learning program is ramping up at Mesa Community College with classes going online because of the pandemic.

There are other social opportunities, such as outdoor hiking and discussion groups. An MCC student ID card gives New Frontier Lifelong Learning members discounts on MCC campuses and in the community.

The program is a peer-led, self-directed organization of over 400 members operating under MCC's sponsorship.

Classes are usually held one time or two times for one to two hours and in some cases over a period of a few weeks. There are no tests, grades or credits to worry about.

Fees this year are $60.
