

NURSING ESCAPE ROOM HELPS STUDENTS HONE SKILLS

APRIL 19, 2022 | MESA COMMUNITY COLLEGE |

A A A

When Mesa Community College nursing students go into the simulation lab, it can be quite nerve-racking. During the past year, Interim Nursing Department Chair and Nursing Simulation Coordinator, Diana Breed, who's been teaching for the past 20 years, noticed students' anxiety level climbing more than usual.

"They go there to apply the knowledge they learned in the classroom, but students say, "They walk in the room and all their thoughts leave their head. They knew it until they walked in the room," explains Breed.

Either the students are uncomfortable and anxiety is keeping them from making decisions they would normally make or they don't have the knowledge as much as they thought they did, she says. So to differentiate between the two, Breed says she and her co-workers tried to eliminate the students' anxiety by allowing them to be in the room without any evaluation at all.

An article about how escape rooms help develop teamwork and thinking sparked Breed's curiosity, but she had never been to one herself. So, she gathered a group of coworkers and went to an escape room nearby. "We worked together as a team to come up with the ideas, we were really bad at it," she says.

Soon after, Breed started work on developing her own nursing escape room scenario. She investigated different types of locks and came up with hints.

One scenario takes students, who work together in a team, through two rooms. In the first room is a man who is dehydrated with food poisoning, but the students don't know this. Breed and her co-workers, laboratory technician Nancy Sanchez Padilla and simulation technician Shayla Turner, observe the students, behind one-way glass.

"When we turn off the lights, we can see in there, but they can't see us," says Breed. "So, we answer for the patients, then tell them what's going on. We answer the phone if they call the doctor."

During the simulation, students read the chart, ask the patient questions, find the clues, and give the correct dosage of medication or IV before they can open the locks and find the final key to move to the next room. It's set up like an escape room with hints along the way, says Breed. In the next room is the patient's wife, who is ready to have a baby.

The students are applying the knowledge they've learned in the classroom, says Breed. They're not graded, but given a formative evaluation.

Although Breed doesn't know yet whether the nursing escape room simulation helps decrease anxiety, she's received positive feedback from participating students.

"I would like students to recognize that whenever you're doing something, you're learning," Breed says. "It doesn't have to be stressful. It can be a fun, exciting thing. It doesn't have to be sitting down taking a test. The more you build your muscle memory, you're building a cognitive link. So, you're doing it in a fun atmosphere and that link will still be there when you need it under a stressful situation as well."

This is the second semester the nursing escape room is offered. It was implemented in 2019, but soon after the pandemic hit, it was put on hold.

Learn more about the MCC nursing program at mesacc.edu/departments/nursing.

SHARE THIS STORY

Related Posts

Arizona Students Awarded $127,534 in Scholarships and Prizes at SARSEF Events in March

Applications open for teacher STEM grants from APS, Phoenix Suns

Centennial provides engineering lessons to students

SUBSCRIBE

Sign up below to receive weekly updates on Arizona education news.

SUBSCRIBE

TRENDING NEWS

Video: Gov. Ducey calls for more school choice in State of the State, no mention of lifting expenditure limit

House Education Committee passes bill to ban instruction that places blame on the basis of race, ethnicity or sex

Legislators vote against partisan school board elections & for library, learning materials bills

Legislators expand parents' access to students' learning materials, hold several other bills in education committees

What education advocates hope to see this legislative session

NATIONAL HEADLINES

Detroit fires veteran teacher who fought to work from home

Some Surprising Things Schools Might Have to Cut Because of Fuel Cost Increases

NYC unveils changes to 'gifted' program, adding 1,000 seats to third grade

This bestselling Holocaust novel is getting a sequel. I won't be teaching it.

Silicon Valley couple to be sentenced in college bribes scam

SECTIONS

AZEDNEWS ARTICLES

NATIONAL HEADLINES

ARIZONA HEADLINES

DATA & REPORTS

INFOGRAPHICS

VIDEOS

SUBMITTED STORIES

SHARE YOUR PHOTOS & STORIES

SUBMIT NOW

STORIES BY YOU

ABOUT AZED NEWS

The Arizona Education News Service is a statewide source for fair, accurate, balanced and constructive journalism on education policy and practice in Arizona.

SUBSCRIBE

Sign up below to receive weekly updates on Arizona education news.

SUBSCRIBE

INFORMATION

Use Our Stories

Advertise

Contact Us

Newsletter Archive

